Mentoring, peer review and teaching the law in 2010

There are some exciting new teaching related initiatives in the University and in the Law School. Many of you are already involved in the Law School's new mentoring programme for our sessional staff, or may become involved in the coming months. And some of you may have heard about the peer review of teaching programme which is being initiated in second semester. This seminar will provide an opportunity for you to learn some more about these two programmes - and for us to discuss how they should fit into our School.

The seminar will also be used to discuss a new proposal for on-going curriculum review. The proposal is that coordinators of core courses make brief presentations about their courses, including the teaching methodology, coverage of legal material and assessment. These presentations will serve several purposes. They will gives us a sense of the law degree as a whole and help us identify the synergies and overlaps between courses. This information will assist in future revisions of courses, and prepare us for forthcoming University and national reviews of the law degree. The seminar will consider the best format for these core course presentations, and develop a list of questions for coordinators to address. Please come along and share your thoughts about this proposal.

Venue: Room 314 Ligertwood Building
